Summary Paragraph

The McThornmor Acres Subdivision Historic District is a mid-20th century residential subdivision that encompasses approximately 90 acres. Located in a suburban area west of downtown, the site extends between University Drive NW and Holmes Avenue NW. The rectangular south end of the property is bounded to the west by Brickell Rd. NW, to the south by Holmes Ave. NW, and to the east by Woodall Ln. NW and is relatively flat with a slight slope to the north. The irregular northern boundary responds to a steeper slope to the northeast that extends to Northington Dr. NW. The street grid at the southern end of the site is rectilinear with a curvilinear grid at the northern end. Streets are paved with asphalt and have rolled concrete curbs. Houses are set back on their lots and typically have landscaped front, side, and rear yards, many with mature trees and plantings.

Narrative Description

The district includes 209 resources of which 208 are houses or duplexes and one is the subdivision entrance sign.

The original McThornmor Acres Subdivision extended the full length of Woodall Ln. NW and included Woodall Cir. NW, Merts Ln. NW, and Speak Rd. NW. Only a half dozen or so houses were completed in this area in 1957. By the following year, approximately sixty houses had been constructed and the subdivision had been expanded to the west along Richardson Dr. NW and Clayrest Dr. NW to Brickell Rd. NW. Another addition was made to the subdivision in 1959 with the addition of Horace Dr. NW and Hunt Dr. NW. More than 80 houses were constructed by 1959 with approximately 38 more added in 1960, 27 in 1961, 31 in 1962, 10 in 1963, 4 in 1964, 4 in 1965, and 6 between 1966 and 1969.

Architecturally, McThornmore Acres Subdivision is typified by modest size houses that are typically brick veneer (182 of 208, 88%) with some scattered frame houses (26 of 208, 12%) and one story in height, although there are also two split-level houses. Most of the resources in the study area (198 of 208, 96%) fall into the stylistic category of Ranch style dwellings. The designs of two resources are consistent with the Neoclassical Revival style, two with the Split Level style, two with the Contemporary style, and two were of no identifiable style. For descriptive purposes, this study has utilized guidance contained within the following publications: Virginia and Lee McAlester's Field Guide to American Houses (New York: Alfred A. Knopf, 1986), Georgia State University's Atlanta Housing 1944-1965 (Atlanta, GA: Georgia State University, 2001), and Mead and Hunt, Inc.'s A Model for Identifying and Evaluating the Historic Significance of Post-World War II Housing (Washington, DC: Transportation Research Board, 2012).

One of the resources, Resource #61 at 4208 Holmes Ave. NW (Photo #61), in the Neoclassical Revival style, was historically not part of the original subdivision. However, the resource is an integral part of the streetscape and is now historically associated with the neighborhood.

Atlanta Housing 1944-1965 defines the Ranch style as follows:

Emphasizing the horizontal, these houses are typically one-story with a long low-pitched roof. Roofs can be hipped or gabled. Garages are attached and usually evident from the front façade of the house. Windows are often double or horizontal in form again emphasizing the 'long and low' style. A large picture window is usually installed on the front of the house indicating the living room.

Split-Level houses typically include a single-story block that is attached to a two-story block, with the floor plate of the latter intersecting the former somewhere between its floor plate and its midpoint with the ceiling. Two examples are found in the neighborhood: Resource #205 (1961), 1203 Woodall Ln. NW (Photo #17), and Resource #208 (1966), 1206 Woodall Ln.

Architects and builders began to abandon historical precedents and the resulting houses are referred to as Mid-Century Modern. There are two examples in the neighborhood: Resource #72 (1960), 4305 Horace Dr. NW (Photo #46), and Resource #85 (1962), 4200 Hunt Dr., NW (Photo #38). Both feature wide low-pitched gable roofs, with Resource #72 having a distinctive recessed entry design.

Integrity

The McThornmor Acres Subdivision Historic District retains integrity of location, design, setting, materials, workmanship, feeling, and association. The resources within the district typically remain in their original location. The basic designs of the resources within the district are relatively unaltered from the district's period of significance and 199 of the 209 (95%) resources in the inventory are classified as contributing. Of the ten noncontributing resources, seven were constructed after the district's period of significance and three have been altered to the degree where they no longer retain integrity. The district's setting is largely unchanged from its period of significance. Resources within the district typically retain their historic materials and workmanship. Given the overall retention of its historic appearance and character, the district also retains integrity of feeling and association.

Archaeological Component

Although no formal archaeological survey has been made of this area, the potential for subsurface remains is good. Buried portions may contain significant information that may be useful in interpreting the entire area.

Inventory

The district includes 209 resources, 199 (95%) of which are contributing and 10 are noncontributing (5%). Resources date from the following periods: 1956-1960, 120 (57%); 1961-1965, 76 (36%); 1966-1969, 6 (3%), and post-1969, 7 (3%). None of the resources were previously listed in the National Register.

Of the noncontributing resources, 7 were constructed after the district's period of significance and the other 3 were significantly remodeled in recent years.

Statement of Significance Summary Paragraph

(Provide a summary paragraph that includes level of significance, applicable criteria, justification for the period of significance, and any applicable criteria considerations.)

The McThornmor Acres Subdivision Historic District is locally significant under National Register Criterion A in the area of community planning and development. Platted in 1956 and developed between 1956 and 1969, the McThornmor Acres subdivision is the largest subdivision in an area of west Huntsville that the city annexed in 1955, and is among the first to be developed after this area was annexed. The neighborhood is a representative example of a mid-1950s residential subdivision that was constructed in response to the rapidly growing demand for housing brought on by the development of the aerospace industry in Huntsville, including the Ordnance Rocket Center at Redstone Arsenal. McThornmor Acres was intended to make housing available for professionals associated with the missile and space programs at the nearby Redstone Arsenal. The nominated historic district illustrates several trends in local community planning and development, including phased development and conformity with the City of Huntsville's 1949 subdivision regulations that supported the design standards established by the Federal Housing Administration (FHA), which played an important role in financing Huntsville's mid-20th-century housing boom. The district is also locally significant under Criterion C for its collection of mid-20th century residential architecture that conforms to the FHA standards of the period. These standards favored the construction of new homes in neighborhoods of a generally homogenous character to ensure that property values would remain stable. McThornmor followed these standards, both in terms of its layout and home design.

The period of significance for the McThornmor Acres Subdivision Historic District extends from 1956, when construction of the first section began, through 1969, when the last contributing resource was constructed, after which there was no additional development in the district until 1975.

Narrative Statement of Significance

(Provide at least one paragraph for each area of significance.)

Community Planning and Development

The McThornmor Acres Subdivision Historic District is locally significant under National Register Criterion A in the area of community planning & development for its association with broader patterns in planning and developing residential subdivisions in response to the rapid population increase in Huntsville that accompanied the establishment and expansion of missile and space programs at Redstone Arsenal. A majority of the earliest residents of the neighborhood were professionals employed at the arsenal and at other government facilities and private companies associated with the space and missile programs. Located west of downtown, the land where McThornmor Acres was laid out was part of the first of two large land annexations by the City of Huntsville in 1955-1956 that more than doubled the city's land area. McThornmor Acres was the largest and most deliberately planned of the mid-1950s subdivisions that developed between downtown and the branch campus of the University of Alabama that was established in the late 1950s; this branch campus later became the University of Alabama at Huntsville.

McThornmor Acres is an excellent local example of the city's mid-20th-century residential subdivisions. Its planning and development exemplify several broader trends in the post-World War II expansion of Huntsville. Although the developers of McThornmor Acres had a plan for the entire development, they platted and sold the lots in phases. This was a common strategy among developers in Huntsville. Like many post-war real estate developers in Huntsville and throughout the United States, the developers of McThornmor Acres relied on loan guarantees from the FHA and Veterans' Administration (VA) to make mortgages affordable and available for prospective home buyers. For the houses to qualify for FHA loans, the development had to follow FHA policies, and specifically its Minimum Property Requirements (and, later, its Minimum Property Standards of 1958) that were intended to reduce the underwriting risks of FHA loan guarantees. These requirements, which stressed the uniformity of design as a way to ensure stable property values, shaped the design of residential subdivisions and their houses in the decades following World War II. McThornmor Acres received FHA approval and met its requirements for the layout of the subdivision and the design of construction of its houses.

Planning and Developing McThornmor Acres, 1956-1969

This area is shown as undeveloped on a 1941 map of the city by the planning commission and was most likely in use as farmland.¹ The area was still indicated as "farming" on a 1951 map called "City of Huntsville, Alabama Proposed Natural Gas System."² On August 30, 1955, the municipal boundaries were extended west to Sparkman Drive, making the area that would become McThornmor Acres part of the City of Huntsville.

On April 7, 1956, Vance J. Thornton, S. O. McDonald, James D. Thornton, Carl A. Moring, Jr., and Allen M. Northington incorporated McThornmor Acres, Inc. "to engage in the business of buying, selling, owning and brokering real estate."³ The name McThornmor is a contraction of the incorporator's names: "Mc" for McDonald, "Thorn" for Thornton, and "mor" for Moring. Vance Johnson Thornton (1916-1965), was a prominent local businessman who operated a real estate and insurance company. James Day Thornton (1929-2008), Vance Thornton's cousin, was president of Wikle, Thornton, Holcombe Insurance Co., served as president of the Huntsville Chamber of Commerce, and was a founding member of the Bank of Huntsville. Shelby O. McDonald (1905-1974), a building contractor, was primarily a financial partner. Moring (1920-2014) was an attorney. Allen Merrill Northington (1918-1988) was an architect based in Florence, Alabama, and was associated with the firm of Turner & Northington.

Two days before the incorporation of McThornmor Acres, Inc., Carl A. Moring, Jr. presented a plat for McThornmor Acres Subdivision to the Huntsville Planning Commission, which had to review and approve subdivision plats before they could be recorded in the deed office or improved. An article in the Huntsville Times noted that "the site, already FHA approved and fully within the city limits, contains 290 lots."⁴ Final approval was given for the subdivision at the planning commission's meeting on May 4, 1956.⁵

A plat of "McThornmor Acres, Huntsville, AL" by G. W. Jones & Sons Consulting Engineers, Huntsville, was recorded on May 29, 1956.⁶ The area included Woodall Lane, Woodall Circle,

Speake Road, and 5 lots along Richardson Drive between Athens Pike and Northington Drive. G. W. Jones & Sons was an engineering and surveying firm that was established in Huntsville in 1886 and operated until 2013, when it was acquired by Littlejohn Engineering Associates of Nashville. The consulting engineer for McThornmor Acres, Carl T. Jones, also served as the City Engineer for Huntsville from 1929-1960.⁷

Throughout these early stages of planning, McThornmor Acres, Inc. had a long-term option on the land but did not own it. On August 6, 1956, McThornmor Acres, Inc. acquired forty acres of land from J. B. and Mary B. Woodall for $10 and other valuable consideration.⁸ McThornmor Acres, Inc. obtained a mortgage for $58,000 on November 9, 1956 from James E. McGehee & Co. Inc. by pledging 5 lots as collateral.⁹ The loan was payable within six months at 5.5% interest. In the Huntsville Times edition of August 7, 1956, McThornmor Acres, Inc. formally announced they were beginning development of the first phase of McThornmor Acres:

Purchase of 40 acres of land owned by J. B. Woodall on the Athens Pike, and plans for the construction of 50 houses there, were announced this morning by officers of McThornmor Acres, Inc. The 40 acres, fronting 725 feet on the north side of Athens Pike— with the easternmost point 400 feet from Jordan Lane— is part of a 160-acre tract which the development company has under long-term option. Approximately $80,000 already has been invested in the development, the officers said, of which slightly more than three-fourths was spent for the land.

Eighty-seven lots are included in the tract, which extends from Athens Pike through to the new U.S. 72. Plans are to build 50 houses for sale, and sell 37 lots to individual home builders. Contracts for streets, utility lines and other improvements are expected to be awarded this week, the developers said. Construction of the houses, to be decided on a competitive bid basis, are expected to start as soon as the FHA commitments are obtained. Tentative commitments for the project were included in the 370 tentative commitments released by FHA last spring. Only 50 of the 370 are known to have been approved so far. However, approval of McThornmor commitments is expected in the near future, since the subdivision property already has been given FHA approval. The new houses will be in the $14,000 to $18,000 price range, and consist of three bedrooms with one and a half or two ceramic tile baths. Features will include year-round York air conditioning, Youngstown kitchens, cork tile floors and carports. Most of the houses will be of brick veneer.¹⁰

Construction on infrastructure for the subdivision was largely completed by April 1957, when the developers began advertising lots for sale. An advertisement for McThornmor Acres appeared in the Huntsville Times on April 14, 1957: "Open House/All Day/Today/in/McThornmor Acres/Rocket City's Newest Most-Complete/ Subdivision/Features • Three Bedrooms • Large Living Room • 1-

The earliest purchasers of lots in McThornmor Acres included both speculative builders and families seeking to build or purchase their own home. Thornmor Acres, Inc. sold Lot 1 in Block 3 and Lot 1 in Block 4 to Edward Hugh Keel on February 22, 1957.¹³ Keel was a local home builder and possibly constructed one or more model units. On March 29, 1957, McThornmor Acres, Inc. sold Lot #9, Block #3 to Rampy B. Collinsworth, but he is not listed in the 1959 city directory at this address (920 Speake Rd.) suggesting that he may have been a builder or a speculative purchaser.¹⁴ Henry Eugene Pike purchased Lot #18 in Block #3 on May 14, 1957, but is also not listed in the 1959 city directory at this address (903 Woodall Ln.) suggesting that he may also have been a builder or a speculative purchaser.¹⁵ Arthur E. Oswalt purchased Lot #5 in Block #1 on July 26, 1957 and is listed at this address (904 Woodall Lane) in the 1959 city directory, suggesting that this was the first owner-occupied lot purchased.¹⁶ Most of the 100 lots in the original subdivision were sold by the end of the year. It is unknown how many houses were completed in that year, but at least eleven were.

The second phase of development began in late 1957, after McThornmor Acres, Inc. obtained additional land and took out another mortgage for $118,900 from James E. McGehee & Co. Inc. To secure the loan, McThornmor Acres, Inc. pledged 10 lots as collateral with the loan payable within 6 months at 6% interest.¹⁷ A “Plat of McThornmor Acres Second Addition” by G. W. Jones Consulting Engineers was presented to the Huntsville Planning Commission on March 20, 1958 and recorded on May 1.¹⁸ Located to the west of the original development, the area included Clayrest Drive, Richardson Drive, and Athens Pike between Brickell Road and just east of Henderson Road.¹⁹ Deed records suggest that most of the lots in the Second Addition were sold to homebuilders who built houses and then sold them to individual property owners. The most notable of these was Washington Homes, Inc., a company that was operated by Vance Thornton.

The McThornmor Acres Garden Club was organized in May 1958.²⁰ The group's most lasting effort was the erection of the McThornmor sign and planter at the Woodall Lane entrance to the subdivision in 1959. The committee's March 1959 meeting was reported in the March 15 edition of the Huntsville Times:

Howell Sims' sketch of the planter was presented for approval of the members. The structure will be of roman brick with a nameplate "McThornmor Acres." The planter will be L-shaped and about three feet high.²¹

The 1959 city directory indicates people living on most of the lots along Woodall Ln. NW, many along Holmes Ave. NW and Speake Rd. NW, some along Richardson Dr. NW, and one on Woodall Cir. NW. Brickell Rd. NW and Henderson Rd. NW, which lay in the Second Addition, are listed in the directory but with no individual address listings. This pattern suggests that the earliest development in the Second Addition took place along its southern edge.

A "Plat of McThornmor Acres Third Addition" by C. W. Jones Consulting Engineers was recorded on December 1, 1959.²² The area included Hunt Drive and Horace Drive between Brickell Road and just east of Speake Road, and occupied the northwest corner of the subdivision. A 1962 "Master Plan with Existing Conditions" prepared for the University of Alabama Research Institute by Hannes Luehrsen, a planning consultant, shows that houses had been built in all three phases of the development by that time, with denser development to the east and south and scattered development to the northwest.²³

On December 2, 1965, Vance Thornton passed away unexpectedly and the event was noted in a front page article in the Huntsville Times: "Vance J. Thornton, 49, prominent in Huntsville business, political and civic circles for many years, died last night at his home, 2208 Brandon St., apparently in his sleep... Mr. Thornton was engaged in the insurance, real estate and construction businesses, and had served three terms on the Huntsville city council, the last of which he was president of the council... During World War II, he served in the 80th infantry division, part of Gen. Patton's Third Army, and was wounded in combat... He has been in the real estate and general insurance business in Huntsville for the past 14 years, as senior partner in the real estate firm of Thornton and Thornton and a member of the Board of Directors of the First Federal Savings and Loan Association of Huntsville since 1962. He was also one of the owners of the Kings Inn Motor Hotel. At the time of his death, Mr. Thornton, was president of Huntsville Industrial Sites, a member of the Industrial Development Board of the city of Huntsville, vice president of the University of Alabama Huntsville Foundation and treasurer of the Huntsville Industrial Expansion Committee. He was a member and elder of First Presbyterian Church of Huntsville."²⁴

The Space Race and Huntsville's Post-War Housing Boom

McThornmor Acres Subdivision is among a grouping of residential subdivisions that were developed in Huntsville from 1949 through the 1960s that illustrate the dramatic impact of the space race on Huntsville's population and built environment. Originally established as a chemical munitions manufacturing facility during the mobilization for World War II, the Huntsville Arsenal, the Huntsville Depot, and the Redstone Ordnance Plant were collectively renamed Redstone Arsenal in 1943. During the war, as many as 4,400 workers were employed at the facility. At the war's end, activity at the arsenal declined sharply to a mere 600 workers and the facility was declared excess in 1947.

In June 1949, Redstone Arsenal was reactivated to serve as the Ordnance Rocket Center. 130 German contract employees, 120 civil-service employees, and 500 military personnel that had been assembled under Dr. Wernher von Braun at Fort Bliss, Texas were transferred to Huntsville. In the early 1950s, civilian contractors such as the Thiokol Corporation and Rohm & Haas Company established research facilities at or near the Arsenal. Additional military units were transferred to the Huntsville facility, and by 1956, Redstone Arsenal employed 9,000 people.²⁵ In 1952, the Chrysler Corporation opened an electronics factory near Redstone Arsenal to support missile development by the Army.²⁶

In 1960, the Marshall Space Flight Center was developed at Redstone Arsenal to support the United's States' exploration of space. The National Register nomination for the Twickenham Historic District provides background on the impact of this industry in Huntsville:

As historian Bruce Schulman emphasizes, the impact of NASA on Huntsville reshaped the city. "A sagging textile town of 16,000 when von Braun and the German rocket team arrived in 1950, Huntsville claimed 72,000 residents, but little else, when the Marshall Space Flight Center opened in 1960. The Huntsville Research Institute followed in 1961. The Cummings Research Park opened a year later. Two industrial parks, housing IBM and Rockwell, opened in 1965." Moreover, Schulman concludes, "In 1966, six years after NASA arrived, per capita personal income in Huntsville outdistanced the rest of Alabama by 20 percent. The city's population nearly doubled between 1960 and 1970 [to 139,282 people]. The influx converted an overwhelmingly agricultural workforce into a diversified one, with many government and service workers. Almost a third of the city's 1966 labor force had come there since 1960."²⁷

In the 1950s and 1960s, developers and City planners scrambled to meet the demand for new housing for the rapidly increasing population. New housing developments proliferated, and the size of the city increased by 30,000 acres in the 1950s.²⁸ The housing boom in Huntsville was in full swing by 1954 as indicated in an op-ed article in the January 9, 1955 edition of the Huntsville Times entitled "No End In Sight":

Five hundred new houses in a year, and the demand is still on! That's the essence of articles carried and other columns of this newspaper today. It has been apparent for many months that home construction was booming in Huntsville, that it's hard to realize that so many have been built, especially when you consider that the great majority of the units were individually built... that is, not project-type housing. During 1954, entirely new neighborhoods rose from the dust, and practically every vacant lot has been filled.... One would think there must be an end to the demand somewhere along the line. And, probably there is, but it is certainly not in sight. According to the housing survey conducted by Redstone Arsenal, out of 1,721 employees who now rent homes in the Huntsville area, 743 say they plan to build or buy their own homes! To be more specific, 447 plan to buy, while 296 plan to build... and the survey did not reach all employees.²⁹

Despite all of this construction, in 1957, General John B. Medaris, commander of the Army Ballistic Missile Agency at Redstone Arsenal, reported to a U.S. House of Representative Subcommittee that Huntsville needed more than 2,500 houses to meet facility's housing needs.³⁰

The McThornmor Acres neighborhood is located in the western area of the city, approximately three miles from the Redstone Arsenal, so that it was intended to be convenient to the work of many of its residents. A comprehensive inventory and evaluation of Huntsville's post-World War II subdivisions has not been completed. However, McThornmor Acres has long been recognized by the local community as being representative of the significant growth that the missile and space programs brought to the community. In terms of its developmental history, as the home of many individuals who were involved in these industries, and by its layout and the architecture of its houses, McThornmor Acres presents an excellent physical illustration of this highly significant chapter in Huntsville's history.

A sizable proportion of employees in Huntsville's military facilities and aerospace industries had sufficient salaries and resources to purchase their own homes. By 1962, the median family income in Huntsville was the highest among urbanized areas in Alabama, thanks in part to the large proportion of scientific, professional, managerial, and technical positions in Huntsville's aerospace industry.³¹ Comparison of the housing prices at McThornmor Acres with contemporary advertisements for other subdivisions indicates that the prices in McThornmor were above average and suggests that the homes were targeted for management and professional incomes. In the summer of 1958, a house in McThornmor Acres was advertised for $17,500, within the $14,000-$18,000 range that the developers originally planned. By comparison, in Greenhills Village, prices ranged from $13,500 to $14,500; three-bedroom houses in Country Club Heights were in the "$10,000 Price Range"; and houses in Shady Lane Acres started at $14,500.³² While larger and more substantial individual houses are also advertised in the $30,000 range, many others were priced at substantially less than $10,000.

The connection between the expansion of military and aerospace facilities in Huntsville and the development of McThornmor Acres is evident in the occupations of the neighborhood's residents in the late 1950s and early 1960s. Of the 35 houses occupied along Woodall Lane in 1959, eleven housed engineers and technicians employed at the arsenal; five of the residents were associated with the Army Ballistic Missile Agency; five were in the U.S. Army; three were associated with Thiokol, a Huntsville producer of rocket and missile propulsion systems; and three were associated with Chrysler Corporation, a company that was an integral part of the missile program. Remaining occupations represented in the district include businessman and a physician.³³

The establishment of NASA's Marshall Space Flight Center in 1960 and a continued increase in the number of federal aerospace and engineering contractors that supported the U.S. space exploration program fueled further residential development in McThornmor Acres and in other Huntsville neighborhoods. In the 1964 city directory, thirteen NASA employees lived on Horace Drive NW, Henderson Road NW, Clayrest Drive NW, and Brickell Road NW; these streets were all in the second and third additions to McThornmor Acres, which were laid out in the late 1950s. Other residents on these streets were also associated with the aerospace industry as employees of the Army Missile Command, Redstone Arsenal, Brown Engineering, General Electric, IBM, Chrysler Corporation and Lockheed Martin. The presence of a church pastor, a police officer, and several business owners attests to the broader growth in the local government, community, and economy that accompanied the expansion of NASA and Redstone Arsenal.³⁴

At the time that McThornmor Acres was developed, residential neighborhoods in Huntsville were racially segregated. McThornmor Acres was planned and developed for whites, and no documentation of African Americans living in the neighborhood in the 1950s or 1960s has been located. The recorded deed restrictions for the McThornmor Acres subdivision did not specify that only white people could own property or live the neighborhood, but such provisions may have been included in individual deeds.³⁵

The FHA and Financing Huntsville's Post-War Housing Boom

New housing construction had come to a virtual halt during World War II. After the war, the demand for housing mushroomed nationwide, due to rising general prosperity, the large number of veterans who had access to the benefits of the G.I. Bill, and the expanded role of the Federal Housing Authority's (FHA) mortgage insurance program. Between 1945 and 1954, more than 13 million houses were built in the U.S. A Model for Identifying and Evaluating the Historic Significance of Post-World War II Housing published by the Transport Research Board describes the changed Post-War housing circumstance:

Postwar suburban growth can be attributed to new prosperity, housing demand, government and private encouragement of home ownership, a shift in standards of living, and the readily available suburban land that was suitable for residential development. In addition, the growing automobile age and improved infrastructure, through new roads and the Interstate Highway System, contributed to suburban development further from cities' central cores by improving access to available land for development. It is this combination of social, economic, and political factors that shaped the development of the postwar residential suburbs, resulting in 60 percent of individuals owning their own single-family home by the 1960s.³⁶

Recognizing the need to stimulate housing construction, the federal government passed the Housing Act of 1949, which, among other things, expanded the FHA's mortgage insurance program that had been created under the National Housing Act of 1934. The earlier act:

Signed into law on June 27, 1934, the National Housing Act began a new chapter for American single-family housing and government involvement in the housing market. The objective of the Act was to make funds available for home repair and construction while providing jobs and improving the country's economic conditions resulting from the Great Depression. Longer range objectives were "to reform mortgage lending practices, to broaden opportunities for home ownership, and to raise housing standards." It was these policies that influenced home ownership and residential development patterns well beyond the 1930s, especially during the housing boom following World War II.³⁷

The FHA program provided assurance to private lenders by guaranteeing mortgages against default. With low down payment requirements and relatively low interest rates, home ownership became affordable to a much larger percentage of the population. FHA instituted housing standards that favored the construction of new homes in neighborhoods with generally homogenous character to ensure that property values would remain stable. Federal subsidies also aided with the installation of infrastructure including roads and water and sewer systems, allowing these new neighborhoods to spread further and further from the center of cities.

Advertisements for the Buena Vista subdivision in Huntsville in 1948 stated: "These are new FHA supervised homes that have electric water heaters, built in cabinets and closets, hardwood floors, oil floor furnace heating systems and can be purchased on reasonable terms."³⁸ Covemont Estates was announced in June 1949.³⁹ The 25-lot subdivision was an FHA approved project, the FHA approval of which required that all homes cost between $10,000 and $25,000. Colonial Hill, a 200-unit subdivision "located on the west side of Meridian Pike...one mile from the City Limits" was announced via an advertisement in the July 31, 1949 edition of the Huntsville Times and a subsequent article in November 1949.⁴⁰ The subdivision was developed with 200 houses at a cost of $160,000, eighty percent of which was financed through an FHA loan.

The developers of McThornmor Acres similarly relied upon their ability to offer FHA financing to potential buyers. As a result, securing FHA approval of the layout of the subdivision was one of their first steps, and they specifically mentioned FHA approval of the site in their initial announcement. They also delayed construction of the first houses until they had final FHA commitments.⁴¹ Once the houses were constructed, Thornton & Thornton Real Estate – the main seller of houses in the subdivision – promoted the houses as being approved for FHA financing.

The overall design of McThornmor Acres reflected the minimum FHA requirements, as well as several of the desirable design principles.⁴² Among the minimum principles was access to adequate highways. Located between two major east-west arteries leading west from Huntsville and just west of Jordan Lane, one of the main roads leading south towards Redstone Arsenal, the McThornmor Acres site clearly met this requirement. Another requirement was deed restrictions that regulated setbacks, lot sizes, and minimum construction costs. The deed restrictions for McThornmor Acres that were recorded in August 1956 were typical of subdivisions of the time and reinforced the FHA's mandate of uniformity to ensure the maintenance of property values. The restrictions required that the lot be used for residential purposes, that the design of all buildings be reviewed by an architectural review committee, and that no dwelling cost less than $9,500. They established minimum setbacks and the reservation of utility easements, and prohibited noxious or offensive activities, signs, dumping, temporary structures, oil drilling, raising or keeping livestock or poultry, and the commercial breeding of pets. All individual sewage disposal systems had to be constructed in accordance with the standards of the state and local public health authorities. The architectural control committee was initially composed of S. O. McDonald, James D. Thornton, and Alan M. Northington. The committee was charged with enforcing the deed restriction that required that all buildings meet a certain standard quality of workmanship and materials and "harmony of external design with existing structures." Specific to the design of individual houses, the restrictions required that the architectural control committee consider the "quality of workmanship and materials, harmony of external design with existing structures, and as to location with respect to topography and finish grade elevations." The restrictions further state: "it being the intention and purpose of the covenant to assure that all dwellings shall be of a quality of workmanship and materials substantially the same or better than that which can be produced on the date of these covenants..."⁴³

The street layout also met some of the desirable design principles laid out by the FHA, including adaptation to the topography, elimination of dangerous intersections, and long blocks. The curvature of the northern portions of Henderson Road NW and Woodall Lane NW follow a low ridge line. Of the fourteen intersections in the neighborhood, only two are four-way intersections, reflecting an effort to reduce dangerous intersections as much as possible. In addition, only one street – Woodall Lane NW – directly connects the major roads at the northern and southern boundaries of McThornmor Acres, thus reducing the amount of thru traffic in the subdivision. With only a couple of exceptions, the blocks are long, including nine or more lots on each side of the road.

Planning for Growth in Huntsville

The City of Huntsville recognized the need to regulate the subdivision of land to create new housing opportunities as early as January 1949. With financial and technical assistance from the State Planning Board, the City Council and the Huntsville Planning Board began the process of developing a master plan that would include zoning ordinances, a plan for major streets, and regulations for residential subdivisions. The decision to develop a master plan came as a result of typical issues associated with rapid municipal and suburban growth after World War II: heavy traffic, lack of parking, and the need to extend public utilities to areas outside the city limits. Proponents of the master plan argued that "the proposed subdivision regulations will take care of future expansion of residential areas, so as to provide a more beautiful and balanced city." The regulations, they stressed, would prevent the development of "slum conditions" in newly established neighborhoods.⁴⁴ Reflecting a nationwide trend, these regulations were based on and complied with FHA standards, effectively requiring that all subdivisions in Huntsville follow FHA design.⁴⁵

The Huntsville Planning Commission accepted the final draft of the city's subdivision regulations at their August meeting that year. The regulations were published in the local newspaper in order to allow public comment before being enacted. Soon adopted by City Council, the rules defined a subdivision as "the division of a lot, tract, or parcel of land into two or more lots, plats, sites or other divisions of land of less than two acres each, for the purpose, whether immediate or future, of sale or of building development."⁴⁶ Plats for new subdivisions had to be approved by the city's Planning Commission prior to being recorded at the deed office, and before any improvements or lot sales took place. The Planning Commission was to review plats for conformance with the minimum standards outlined in the regulations. These standards required that developers coordinate street layouts and names with the surrounding area, adapt lots and streets to the topography, adhere to minimum sizes for blocks and streets, construct sidewalks on certain types of roads, and follow standards for angles of intersections, lot arrangements, and lot sizes. The regulations also mandated that utilities be installed before streets could be paved. All of these standards mirrored FHA principles.⁴⁷

A new city map prepared in June 1949, the first compiled in twenty years, recorded all of the city's new subdivisions that were in place by that time: Big Cove Drive, Brookfield, Carmelian Terrace, Glen'll Farms, Haven Manor, Longwood, Mayfair, Monterrey, Scenic Heights, and Westlawn.⁴⁸ The following year, Madison Heights, Maple Hill, Crestview Estates, and Buena Vista Estates are shown on a map prepared by J. W. Goodwin Engineering Co. entitled City of Huntsville, Alabama Proposed Natural Gas System.⁴⁹

The creation of the city master plan and subdivision regulations was timely, since in June 1949, as the planning effort was underway, Redstone Arsenal was reactivated, sparking a rapid increase in population and spurring the establishment of numerous residential subdivisions over the next decade. The Huntsville Times periodically announced the creation of additional new subdivisions throughout the 1950s. The October 24, 1954 edition described nine new subdivisions with an aggregate of 970 new home sites.⁵⁰ Individual and small groupings of new subdivisions were announced frequently in newspapers throughout the decade. For instance, Arsenal Homes, Inc. completed 51 new houses in the Buena Vista Estates in early 1955 and announced plans for 50 additional houses near Huntsville Park. The latter houses were to be completed under FHA supervision, to cost $9,000 to $10,000 each, and were to have brick veneer fronts, asbestos, cedar, and drop sidings.

Newspaper advertisements and municipal records indicate that it was typical for post-war developers in Huntsville to develop large subdivisions incrementally. After gaining initial Planning Commission and FHA approval for the subdivision as a whole, they recorded plats and began improvements on smaller sections of the subdivisions. Once one section was mostly developed, they would plat and improve the next section. The Mayfair neighborhood in south Huntsville, for instance, encompasses four sections of the 44.5-acre Mayfair subdivision (developed between 1942 and 1955) and seven sections of the 76-acre Thornton Acres subdivision (developed between 1953-1968). The 96-acre Mountainbrook subdivision in the Blossomwood neighborhood, also in south Huntsville, was developed in four sections, beginning with the first plat in 1955 and ending with the 4th section in 1959.⁵¹

McThornmor Acres followed this same pattern, as McThornmor Acres, Inc. developed the subdivision in three sections over a period of several years. The newspaper announcements for the subdivision provide some clues as to one possible reason why developers in Huntsville adopted this approach. The August 1956 newspaper announcement of the development of the first tract of McThornmor Acres noted that the developers were waiting on confirmed FHA commitments before beginning house construction, suggesting that developers were unwilling to wait for FHA commitments on the entire subdivision to be approved before beginning construction.

Municipal Expansion and West Huntsville

The rapid increase in demand for housing also fueled expansion of the boundaries of the City of Huntsville. A 1947 annexation to the south of the city and a 1950 annexation to the west brought Huntsville to twice its pre-Civil War size. In 1955, the city expanded further to the west. The 1955 annexation brought in 10.88 square miles between Athens Pike (U.S. 72) on the north and the railroad on the south. The land that would soon become the University of Alabama at Huntsville was included in the annexation and marked its western boundary. A 22-square-mile annexation followed in the spring of 1956 and more than doubled the size of the city.⁵²

The area included in the 1955 annexation was a prime location for residential development because of its proximity to Redstone Arsenal and to main roadways. Jordan Lane NW led south through the annexed area to Redstone Arsenal, while Athens Pike and Holmes Avenue NW were main east-west thoroughfares leading in and out of downtown Huntsville. At the time of the annexation, this area was largely undeveloped, the one exception being the Cloverdale neighborhood, which was platted in 1954 and comprised more modest houses in the $9,000-$12,000 range.⁵³ Less than a year after the area was brought into the city limits, the developers of McThornmor Acres began acquiring land and submitting plats to the City Planning Commission for review. The Daniel and Green Acres subdivisions, located to the south of McThornmor Acres, followed in 1956, while subdivisions on the east side of Jordan Lane NW were developed in the early 1960s. Of the subdivisions developed in this area after annexation, McThornmor Acres was the first and largest in acreage.

Architecture

The district is locally significant under Criterion C for its mid-20th century suburban residential layout and residential architecture. McThornmor Acres is similar in terms of its layout to other contemporary residential subdivisions in the area with an emphasis on regular street setbacks, ample yards, uniform overall design, and a street grid that maximizes the use of space within the confines of the subdivision boundary and topography. As was typical of the period, front yards were considered to be privately-owned extensions of the public realm of the streets with the rear yards being more secluded spaces for families. Following the pattern set by FHA guidelines, the houses in McThornmor Acres are relatively consistent in terms of size and general style and landscaping was promoted both within the rights of way and on individual lots.

Most of the resources in the district (198 of 208, 95%) fall into the stylistic category of Ranch style dwellings. Atlanta Housing 1944-1965 defines the Ranch style:

Emphasizing the horizontal, these houses are typically one-story with a long low-pitched roof. Roofs can be hipped or gabled. Garages are attached and usually evident from the front façade of the house. Windows are often double or horizontal in form again emphasizing the 'long and low' style. A large picture window is usually installed on the front of the house indicating the living room.

Both architecturally, and in terms of their construction, houses of the period were intended to streamline construction and allow for the mass production of houses. As was common in subdivisions of the period, the neighborhood included a mix of houses built speculatively by the project's developers, sold to home builders to develop speculatively, or sold to individual owners who had their own houses built for them. Design was controlled to a degree by FHA requirements and also an architectural committee that was charged with enforcing the rules established by the subdivision. The FHA requirements were specifically designed to promote uniformity to ensure the maintenance of property values.

Only a limited amount of information has been found relative to other contractors who worked in the neighborhood. The son of Carl Moring recalls that Woody Wash was one of the builders.⁵⁴

Common to other Huntsville subdivisions that catered to the middle and upper middle class, the architecture of the houses, while generally consistent in terms of style and materials, still allowed for some individual expression by the designers and builders within the confines of the FHA lending requirements. This contrasted to a degree to more modest subdivisions, where housing tended to be more standardized.

The Ranch style evolved in the U.S. largely in the 1950s as prosperity increased and the immediate post-war housing shortage began to decline. Homeowners were seeking alternatives to the minimal traditional forms common to the decade before that afforded more space, better living arrangements, and a design that reflected the "space age" style that was becoming increasingly popular. Floorplans increasingly reflected an emphasis on the family, with large living rooms adjoining kitchens and dining areas. There was also an emphasis on the automobile, the essential transportation needed by the family to commute to work, shopping, and family activities. Garages and carports became prevalent and increasingly prominent architectural features. The other major shift in exterior design from prior periods was the horizontal orientation of the house relative to the street.

The Ranch houses of McThornmor Acres are typical of national trends. The majority of the houses were built to relatively standardized plans by the project's developers and home builders.

Advertisements for the homes boasted that the houses “feature air conditioning, hardwood floors, natural finish cabinets, GE dishwashers, natural gas heat, carports, three bedrooms, two ceramic baths, large kitchens, breakfast rooms, big dining rooms, and storage space.”⁵⁵ A 1959 advertisement announcing the availability of twenty-five new homes indicated that there was variety in the standardization as they featured “15 different floor plans to choose.”⁵⁶

A majority of the houses (more than 80%) are either fully or partially clad with brick veneer. Hipped roofs are most common, with side gable roofs being the next most common, and cross gable roofs the least most common.

Split-Level houses typically include a single-story block that is attached a two-story block, with the floor plate of the latter intersecting the former somewhere between its floor plate and its midpoint with the ceiling. Two examples are found in the neighborhood: Resource #205 (1961), 1203 Woodall Ln. NW, and Resource #208 (1966), 1206 Woodall Ln. Architects and builders began to abandon historical precedents and the resulting houses are referred to as Mid-Century Modern style. There are two examples in the neighborhood: Resource #72 (1960), 4305 Horace Dr. NW, and Resource #85 (1962), 4200 Hunt Dr., NW. Both feature wide low-pitched gable roofs, with Resource #72 having a distinctive recessed entry design.

The designs of two resources are consistent with the Neoclassical Revival style, two with the Split Level style, two with the Mid-Century Modern style, and two were of no identifiable style. One of the resources, Resources #61 at 4208 Holmes Ave. NW, in the Neoclassical Revival style, was historically not part of the original subdivision. However, the resource is an integral part of the streetscape and is now historically associated with the neighborhood. Neocolonial Revival houses are loosely based on classic Colonial Revival patterns. Of the two examples in the neighborhood, Resource #101 (1966) at 4101 Northington St. NW is more reminiscent of the earlier type. Resource #97 (1965) at 4312 Hunt Dr. NW is a more streamlined example.
